

Artifact: Reflection paper on project

Course: JRN 165

Goal: Professionalism

For Professionalism, I wrote a reflection on a project I did in my Intro to Broadcasting Class (JRN 165). We had a newscast project where each student was given a job in a mock news station. I was given the job of Head Producer and Editor-in-Chief. My job included following up with other students about the stories they had written and editing the entire script for the newscast we would shoot later in the course. Through that process, I learned how to communicate with my fellow classmates in a professional work environment, and I experienced first-hand the importance of teamwork to create an admirable product.

ΦΘK Tips

Strengths:

- The writer discussed how they worked with others in a productive manner.
- The writer used real job-related situations and applied them to their reflection
- The writer stated the job title they held and described responsibilities.

Opportunities:

- The writer could have been more specific about how they communicated professionally with others
- The writer could provide more detail on how the team worked together to create a finished product
